In addition to taking the full classical course of the university, he had devoted his spare time for the last two years of his course in studying law, and with such success that in the fall of 1869 he was ad-mitted to the bar in Cincinnati, and at once entered into active practice and was suc-cessful as a lawyer until he was elected judge of the superior court of Cincinnati in 1879. He served for three years, and then resigned on account of temporary ill health. In so high respect was he held by the bar of Cincinnati that the lawyers with-out regard to politics joined in a petition to Governor Foster not to accept Judge Foraker's resignation. The first name on this petition was George Hoadly, who was at-terwards his competitor for the office of Judge Foraker was elected governor in

In April, 1883, he was appointed by Governor Foster a member of the supreme court commission, serving two years, or during the life of the commission. In 1886 he was a candidate before the Republican state convention for judge of the supreme court, and led the vote in the first two ballots. In November, 1886, he was appointed by Governor Foraker to fill the vacancy on the supreme bench caused by the resignation of Judge Johnson. He entered on the discharge of his duties November 12, and is now on the bench. He wrote the opinion of the court on the Dow law case from Hamilton county, in which the law was sustained. He worked on a farm and attended a country school until May 4, 1864, when he entered the service of his country at the age of seventeen. On his return from the army he attended the Findlay high school; and then accepted a position in a dry goods store in same town. Later he joined the grand army of commercial men, and sold goods on the road for six years, making many friends during his travels. Mr. Poe then engaged in business in North Baltimore, being one of the first business men in that village and built the second house. While traveling on the road in 1881 he was elected county auditor of Wood county. He was re-elected in 1883, after a very bitter struggle, by an increased majority, leading Gen. Robinson, candidate for secretary of state, by sixty-seven votes, To show his popularity, he carried Henry, his home township, which gives seventyfive Democratic majority, by fifty-seven votes.
